Consistent research by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention has shown that half of high school students have had sexual intercourse by the time they graduate. Adults hope these teens will make responsible choices about protecting their health if they choose to have intercourse. While many agree that the best choice for teens is to abstain from intercourse while in high school, educators cannot ignore the 50% of teens who chose to engage in sexual intercourse. Their needs for education about prevention and protection are critically important and must be addressed. In a survey conducted in 2000 by the Kaiser Family Foundation called Sex Education in America: A View from Inside the Nation’s Classrooms, 88% of parents surveyed think that sexuality education in grades 9–12 should include all aspects including birth control and safer sex. Specifically, the overwhelming majority of parents wants students to learn how to deal with pressures to have sex (94%) and how to talk to a partner about birth control and STDs (88%). The following activity will help your students examine what factors can impact the outcome of a sexual experience. (You can see the complete survey results by going to www.kff.org.)

Lesson 1: My Journey from Innocence

Learning Objective: Participants will discuss the factors that can influence the outcome of a sexual experience.

Introduce the story My Journey from Innocence, by Loryn Cozzi and read ONLY THE FIRST FOUR PARAGRAPHS aloud to your students. Stop reading after the line, “It wasn’t until my friend left that things got interesting.”

Have participants get into groups of 2-3 and instruct them to write a realistic ending to this story. Have them incorporate what they know about the characters and situations so far and create a realistic outcome. Give them five minutes to complete.

Invite groups to report back what their endings were and jot down a master list of all the possible endings to this story. Ask, “How many endings that you created were positive? How many were negative? Why do you think that is?”

Distribute copies of My Journey from Innocence on page 1 to group participants and have participants read the rest of the story. Ask, “How does this ending compare to the endings our groups created?” (Most likely many of the endings that your groups created will be negative and this story presents a contrast of a positive ending.) Ask group members why a negative attitude about teen sexual activity pervades our society.

Instruct individuals to underline everything in the story that Loryn and/or Dylan did to help insure their situation had a positive outcome. Review those specific actions as a whole group. Ask, “Was there anything else they could have done to make this a positive experience? Do you agree with their choice? Why or why not?”

Discuss any of the following that seem relevant to your group:

- What does it mean to be too emotionally immature to deal with a sexual relationship?
- How do you know if you’re in love? How can you tell if you’re simply “in lust”?
- How powerful is physical attraction? How can people deal with those feelings?
- Is sex the ultimate way for two people to express their feelings for each other? Could two people choose not to have sex with each other as the ultimate way to express their feelings for each other?
- Even though she has had sexual intercourse, what factors might make Loryn NOT ready for another sexual relationship? Do you think most people assume she would automatically have sex again in her next relationship?

Editor’s Note: Other SEX, ETC. stories that can be used with this activity are: Second Chances: A Bad Decision Doesn’t Have To Last a Lifetime; Skipping Sex: Are You Missing Out?; Are You Ready For Sex? Important Questions To Consider; Are You Too Young For Sex? and Feel Like You’re The Last American Virgin? (You’re Not). All articles are available for printing on our Web site www.sxetc.org.